

Learning Coach 101: HOW TO MAKE IT WORK FOR YOUR FAMILY

Here are eight most common types of Learning Coaches and our advice for each on how to best adapt to an online school environment.

1

STAY-AT-HOME LEARNING COACH

Take advantage of increased one-on-one time. While you're doing tasks around the house, prompt your student to ask and answer questions throughout their LiveLesson instruction time, establishing yourself as their guide.

2

MULTI-STUDENT LEARNING COACH

Group schedules, lessons, and students. Make coaching simple by creating identical student schedules! Encourage collaborative learning where students study subjects together.

Bonus Tip: Allow older students to serve mentors and tutors to younger children

3

PART-TIME WORKING LEARNING COACH

Utilize schedule alterations. If your work schedule changes, you can easily alter your student's core classes to occur later in the day when you're available.

FULL-TIME WORKING LEARNING COACH

Prioritize parent-teacher relationships. As a full-time working parent, you can rely on Connections Academy instructors to keep you involved in your child's education through text, email, or phone call.

CO-PARENT LEARNING COACHES

Use Learning Coach Central. To help ease any confusion, co-parents have access to the platform where video tutorials, learning tools, and Learning Coach responsibilities are available. Being connected to the Learning Coach community is a great way to ease fears thanks to a new network of support!

MULTIPLE LEARNING COACHES IN A HOUSEHOLD

Play to your subject-matter strengths. Divide responsibilities based on your interests as Learning Coaches. This keeps coaching fun for you, and multiple Learning Coaches means more time to focus on ensuring your child becomes the best person you know they can be.

SINGLE PARENT LEARNING COACH

Find your village. We offer plenty of clubs and extracurricular activities to keep your student engaged and motivated while you work. Resources like tutors and counselors are also available to provide your student with a critical support system.

POD LEARNING COACH

Seek community support. Pod learning is a great solution for you if family conflicts interfere with required Learning Coach responsibilities, or if you work during the hours of your child's instruction. Learning pods create an enriching environment where your student can grow as a learner!
